M1 Garand. The U.S. military's principle semi-automatic rifle of the Second World War was still in limited service during early phase of America's involvement in Vietnam. Early on, the U.S. military provided surplus Garands to South Vietnamese troops and rural defense forces. While by 1965 most American infantry were armed with M14 rifles, the Marines of the 2nd Battalion landing force brandished the M1 when storming coastal Viet Cong strongholds during some of America's earliest actions.

One night, while Laurie was eating dinner, the USS Sanctuary got a call about a plane crash. She vividly remembers the patients coming aboard, and the aftermath of this incident, including one boy who was MIA. However, as difficult as this experience was, this was nothing compared to the Tet Offensive. They had new wounded coming in constantly, and trying to care for all of them at once was ...
