I often joke that 50 milers are the “half marathon” of the ultra world. Far, but not too far (you know, relatively speaking). Tough, but still a lot of fun. 50 miles is long enough to give you a feeling of extreme accomplishment (and fatigue!), but short enough that you don't have to miss an entire nights sleep...and then some...like you would with a 100 mile race. 50 milers have become

Guide to Running Ultramarathons hits that mark. Runners may know Powell from his web site, irunfar.com. He's been a fixture in the ultrarunning and trail running communities for years. I have run 11 ultras myself, and have picked up bits and pieces of tips from Powell and others over the years.

This year has brought to light so many seemingly small things that we take for granted, like a hug from a friend or a clear, blue sky under which we can run. This year has also put our running and adventure goals into perspective. Amid the COVID-19 pandemic and wildfire-smoke-filled skies, morning ...
