Town And Country In Roman

Ancient Rome was both a highly urbanized civilization and a very rural one. Large, dense cities sat in the middle of vast oceans of farmland—there weren't suburbs then like the ones we have today. And many of the differences between city and country life that we experience today existed then, too.

Towns in Roman Britain. Interesting Fact. Romans invented towns in Great Britain. The Romans built Britain's first towns. They built towns all over Britain as centers to administer the people they had conquered. Within 17 years

Roman. In the century before the Roman conquest a few tribal centres (oppida) grew up in southern Britain, though only one appears truly urban - Calleva (Silchester), which was laid out c. 25 BC on a grid plan influenced by Roman town planning. Some tribal centres were rebuilt as Roman district capitals after the conquest - Canterbury, Silchester, St Albans and Winchester.
